ENGLISH WRITERS.

An Attempt towards a History of English Literature.

By Prof. HENRY MORLEY, LL.D.

Vol. I.—From the Earliest Times to Beowulf.
Vol. II. embraces From Cædmon to the Conquest.
Vol. III.—From the Conquest to Chaucer.
Vols. IV. & V.—The Literature of the 14th Century.
Vol. VI.—From Chaucer to Caxton, completing the History of English Literature from the Earliest Times to the Invention of Printing.
Vol. VII.—From Caxton to Coverdale.
Vol. VIII.—From Surrey to Spenser.
Vol. IX.—Spenser and His Time.
Vol. X.—Shakespeare and His Time: under Queen Elizabeth.
Vol. XI.—Shakespeare and His Time: under James I. By Henry Morley, LL.D., and Prof. Griffin.

The Spectator says:—

"The author's patient care, his general accuracy, and his wide research are qualities invaluable to the student. Much of the knowledge to be found in these chapters is not readily to be gleaned elsewhere. Indeed, it would have to be sought for in the obscure and difficult field of research upon which the author has been labouring for years."

The Literary World says:—

"Prof. Henry Morley modestly calls his work 'An Attempt towards a History of English Literature,' but we believe all fair-minded critics will pronounce it, if completed in accordance with its early promise, a great standard work on the literature of our country."

The Journal of Education says:—

"This is a helpful work for the intelligent amateur reader who wishes to get a good summarised view of something that he feels that he ought to know, but has either forgotten or never got quite a clear notion of. Knowledge is here made pleasantly accessible. The Professor's careful research, at once extensive and attentive, his personal modesty, and freedom from dogmatism, command great respect."

The Scotsman says:—

"There can be little doubt that the work, when completed, will be a substantial addition to the literary history of these islands, and one which no thorough student of English literature can afford to neglect."

The Cambridge Review says:—

"Throughout the work one is struck with the writer's sympathetic handling of his subject: it is this that constitutes its great charm; and who once finds himself under the worthy Professor's guidance will not easily forsake him. We feel sure that many students and many readers will look forward eagerly for the appearance of successive volumes of the work. Who shall say how many minds will be stirred by these volumes to an earnest study of our noble literature?"

The York Herald says:—

"Brightly written, lucidly arranged, and comprehensive in its conception."

The Aberdeen Free Press says:—

"There can be no doubt that this will prove for many a day the standard history of English literature."
